Happy New Year! Like every year around this time, I’ve been reflecting on the past 12 months. 2020 was a year unlike any other: a global pandemic, social unrest and injustice, and a slew of other issues that left us all anxious for a fresh start.

With all the challenges came lessons. We learned so much. As an agency, we learned why it’s so important to show up for you—no matter what. It doesn’t matter if you live alone or if you live with family members; if you’re gay or straight; or if you live east or west of the river. It doesn’t matter if there’s a global pandemic that forces us all to wear masks and stay home! No matter what’s happening in the world, in our country, in our city, DACL’s commitment to you does not and will not change.

As a community, we learned that even though we needed to social distance, nobody wants to become socially distant — we need each other. The need for human connection is more important now than it has ever been before. And we’ve learned this from the hundreds of volunteers, of all ages and from all over the region, who’ve contacted our office wanting to call a senior who would be alone over the holidays. We were able to connect 250 seniors to volunteers over the holidays to check-in, chat and build friendships. That’s what Thriving Together means — you’re not alone.

And we’ll continue to expand these intergenerational connections through our annual Cupid’s Kids initiative. In past years, we’ve worked with students at DCPS and Public Charter Schools to create Valentine’s Day cards for our homebound seniors. This year, we’re asking the entire community to join us in making this Valentine’s Day extra special! If you want to receive a Valentine’s Day card from a community member, give us a call and we’ll get a card delivered to you. Or, if you want to join us in making cards for other seniors, visit dacl.dc.gov/page/cupidskids or call us at 202-724-5626 for more information.

Across all of DACL’s programs, we’re also calling our participants just to check in. We’ll continue to connect and engage with you through programs like Call & Talk and our virtual events hub — your one-stop shop for fun and engaging activities you can participate in right from home. With our community partners, we’re updating and creating programming that’s designed with you in mind.

More and more seniors are making real connections with our team, with the community, and with each other, and I’d love for you to join us. We might be spending most of our time in our homes these days, but we all need connection. We need each other. So join us online or on the phone!

I’m not usually someone who makes New Year’s resolutions, but 2020 has brought changes for all of us! My personal resolution is also DACL’s resolution — I’m (we’re) resolving to continue to show up more for the community I (we) love. Let’s do this together. Join me in making a New Year’s resolution to reach out to just one more person in your life. Let’s make 2021 the year we commit whole-heartedly to being a part of our community — no matter what the New Year brings.

Take Care,
Laura
Oatmeal All Dressed Up!

As winter weather settles in, many of us turn to warmer and heavier foods, especially first thing in the morning. Although whole wheat toast and whole grain breakfast cereals are good options, another option that is especially nice on cold mornings is a bowl of oatmeal.

Oatmeal may help regulate your digestion and blood sugar and may help lower your cholesterol and blood pressure. It is also a cost-efficient breakfast.

Though some people like oatmeal on its own with a splash of milk or water, others find plain oatmeal lacking in taste. When left to its own devices, it can get slippery or gluey, and the flavor can be bland.

Fortunately, oatmeal is the perfect food to dress up. Oatmeal can take on a sweet look. For example, you can add fresh fruit, like sliced apples, bananas or berries. Alternatively, you can drop in a tablespoon of jelly, preserves or dried fruit such as raisins or cranberries; just be aware that these items often have a lot of added sugar.

A tablespoon or two of unsweetened applesauce or unflavored canned pumpkin is lovely in the fall. You can also sprinkle in spices like cinnamon or nutmeg. A drizzle of honey or stevia helps with sweetness, while a tablespoon of nut butter or yogurt offers a protein boost. Chopped nuts and seeds are packed with healthy fats and vitamins. If you crave a special treat, a few dark chocolate chips or a sprinkle of unsweetened shredded coconut is especially delicious.

A closely guarded secret is that oatmeal can also take on a savory look with veggies, proteins, spices or a combination of these. For instance, adding a handful of wilted greens, a poached egg and salt and pepper is an easy way to dress up your oatmeal. Sautéed bell peppers and spinach with turmeric make a savory oatmeal that is almost too beautiful to eat.

Alternatively, a sprinkle of your favorite cheese, a few oven-roasted or sundried tomatoes, and a tablespoon of pesto sauce makes a breezy Mediterranean meal. Sautéed onions and mushrooms and fresh or dried herbs create another savory option, while adding a bit of cooked turkey bacon or chorizo can make this option more complex.

Sautéed potatoes or squash are a perfectly autumnal add-in. You can also cook your oatmeal in low-sodium chicken stock, bone broth, or vegetable broth instead of water to increase its initial savory flavor.

Though oatmeal may seem like a humble whole grain option upon first glance, it is only limited by your imagination. May you go forth and invent the most well-dressed oatmeal in the District.
